"Cannabis legal in Germany"

Germany recently joined a select group of nations legalizing cannabis, allowing individuals and voluntary associations to cultivate and possess limited amounts of the drug.

The law permits growing up to three plants for personal use and owning up to 25 grams of cannabis. Additionally, non-commercial cannabis production is sanctioned for cannabis clubs with a maximum of 500 adult members. The government aims to combat the black market and enhance youth protection with this move. Health Minister Karl Lauterbach defended the law, citing the need to address rising cannabis use among young people and the increasing potency of street drugs.

"Social media and plastic surgery"

The field of plastic surgery is changing dramatically thanks to shifts in technology and social media.

Since the start of the pandemic, there's been a surge in the popularity of plastic surgery procedures, and remote meetings and increased time on camera seems to be a huge factor. Cosmetic surgery used to be a tool of the elite; however, it's now available to everyone. In 2020, there were about 2.3 million cosmetic procedures in the United States worth 16 billion dollars.

Social media's influence on beauty standards has led to the term 'Instagram face' where people start to look more similar thanks to filters, makeup, and plastic surgery. Social media have built-in filters that alter face shape or facial features to fit current beauty trends. This gives users an instant picture of what they might look like, and it helps the filters go viral.
